Obama won Iowa twice; Dems took 52% of the vote in the congressional races in 2018. Is there a ticket that can win Iowa against Trump and help beat Ernst? Sure there is.

TX always has shitty turnout. It was about 46% in both 2016 and 2018, way below the national average. A big GOTV movement, starting now with registrations, and a good candidate against Cornyn (Beto again?) could deliver TX.

Agreed on Iowa. It's just tougher than it was in 2008. It's tough to win a solid Senate majority now that MO, IN and ND seats are out of reach even in a huge Democratic year.

The problem for Dems though is that the Senate map has gotten so tough for them thanks to clustering of their support that who knows if even a 330 EV win (which I believe is quite possible) would translate into a Senate majority.

A reasonable thing to want is the 2020 Democratic ticket to win by well over 300 electoral votes - 330 or so -- to bring a Dem senate and to show Trumpism is electoral disaster so it never comes back.

Obama now supports M4All. You will hang on to "improving the ACA" simply bc you harbor resentment toward Bernie Sanders 4running against HC in '16. Never mind millions of Americans will finally have affordable healthcare. Not yr concern, obviously.

Absolutely! It's a big reason I worked 90 hour weeks to get Democrats elected in the #BlueWave. Never saw my family but did it for my kids. I'd do it again in a heartbeat!

Neera, a few of us Dems have been screaming for years for our leadership to grow a backbone & fight this CROOKED GOP. We saw what was happening & couldn't understand why the "turn the other cheek" attitude. It's long overdue & fairly certain folks will re-involve themselves now.

Its stuff like this that gives liberals a bad name. Someone thinking about running for potus is threatened with a boycott bc the liberals are offended? It's this stuff that pushes me more moderate. I get the logic but not the hypocrisy.

Maggie Haberman @maggieNYT
Conservatives don't think Kushner understands the fault lines of the immigration debate. Schumer/senators don't believe he has the power to thwart Miller with Trump. And activists say he doesn't understand that the changes to asylum-seeking are significant nytimes.com/2019/01/26/us/...

Just for the record: @SenTedCruz voted for a clean CR without a wall in December, voted against the same bill on Thursday and then voted for it yesterday. So that is a flip-flop-flip for those keeping score at home. Or in Texas.

It's cool and sophisticated to say workers and not Democrats ended the shutdown. It's factually inaccurate, but whatever. Better to look good than feel good.

(Dems had to hold the line long enough for the frustration to spark wildcat labor actions & for them to have an effect.)

It's a reminder that if we all work together, there's literally NOTHING we can't accomplish. But that means no back-biting, no in-fighting and most importantly NO giving up! Of the People, For the People and By the People actually means something to Democrats.

Conspiracy right here

over 50,000 stolen documents.

4. ROGER JASON STONE, JR. was a political consultant who worked for decades in U.S. politics and on U.S. political campaigns. STONE was an official on the U.S. presidential campaign of Donald J. Trump ("Trump Campaign") until in or around August 2015, and maintained regular contact with and publicly supported the Trump Campaign through the 2016 election.

5. During the summer of 2016, STONE spoke to senior Trump Campaign officials about Organization 1 and information it might have had that would be damaging to the Clinton Campaign. STONE was contacted by senior Trump Campaign officials to inquire about future releases by Organization 1.

6. By in or around early August 2016, STONE was claiming both publicly and privately to have communicated with Organization 1. By in or around mid-August 2016, Organization 1 made a public statement denying direct communication with STONE. Thereafter, STONE said that his

Yes, she has great potential, but it's a global pressure cooker. Her best qualities can become huge vulnerabilities. I hope she makes the learning curve & lasts long enough for people to bitch about her age. 😎 Hope she's good people around her & learns what she needs from Pelosi

Someone sent this to me. Perhaps if you want to criticize you could @ me. That seems pretty adult. Then I could inform you that reconciliation, which takes 51 votes, requires budgetary impact and therefore couldn't be used for a bill like national ID requirement in the states.

True but note GOP has already crafted much of their agenda (notably ACA, finreg, taxes) to go through reconciliation with 50 votes. They pushed the method's limits but also their agenda of all-cuts-all-the-time fits the method; expansion and mitigation, what we need, less so.

Follow the basic rules. Call your State's Senator. Calls from outside the state don't carry as much weight with the office. Then call a friend you have in a red state, and get them to call their Senator, too.

Opinion is really the lowest form of human knowledge. It requires no accountability, no understanding. The highest form of knowledge is empathy, for it requires us to suspend our egos and live in another's world. It requires profound purpose larger than the self kind of understanding. ~Bill Bullard

I swesr to God, I don't know why we insist on making problems for ourselves. When people do that, I instantly become VERY suspicious of their motives; because, boy, that sure seems like a devisive move to me, and one a troll would make.

Friends, we are on the downward slope of the Trump presidency. There are more days behind us than in front of us. And now we have so many great presidential candidates running with more to join. It's up to us to spend the next two years working to ensure he has one term- if that.

Neera Tanden

@neeratanden

We worked our hearts out for the midterms. But the work doesn't end with a Democratic House. In 2020 we can end this madness with a new President and Mitch McConnell as minority leader, if he hasn't been defeated in his reelection.

It's up to us. We can do it. And we will.

There were parents and teachers chaperoning those boys in Washington, and in the video some of the adults were laughing too. No one stopped the kid who was in the tribal elder's face. It's not just the kids that are the problem. It's the parents too.

Gillibrand had plenty of nice things to say about her possible 2020 opponents in Iowa, including Warren, Booker, Harris and Bernie.

But the NY senator also noted something that Dems have long used to attack Sanders.

"He is not actually in our party," she said.

Full exchange:

Gillibrand: "We have amazing stars in our party. We have Bernie, Liz, well he is not actually in our party, let's just start with Liz. And Cory and Kamala are all amazing."

CNN: "You don't consider Bernie a Democrat?"

Gillibrand: "Well he is not. He is an independent. But he caucuses with us, which I am very grateful for. And I think a lot of his ideas are great."

The shutdown in a short story:
A neighbor hates your fence & wants you to build a new one.
He drives into it, destroying it, your yard, the big oak tree, & your garage.
He offers money for the yard/tree/garage & demands you pay for the fence.
He calls it a compromise.

Because it feels like a leftover from the '90s, when we were told skills training would solve inequality. It didn't. I agree that more education is a good thing, but it doesn't result in kids having health insurance or their parents having living-wage jobs.

Children need more than access to get a good education. They also need access to healthcare, a financially stable home, and a safe community with economic opportunity. Focusing on one factor and lecturing those who ask about the others is not the best way to reduce inequality.

Isn't that kind of what you're doing, too? Accessible, high-quality, free early childhood education is one thing that would help alleviate inequality. Affordable healthcare and higher wages are others. By discussing one, we're not necessarily discounting others.

The errors may be inconsequential while the implication of the report - Trump suborning perjury - accurate. Otherwise the denial should have been swift and clear. But it was neither. My guess is Mueller has evidence Trump suborned perjury but doesn't think it's airtight yet.

Gia DeAngeville @Deangeville · 19 Jan 2019

I agree with this. They purposefully parsed their words so carefully, it was barely a denial. If the story was false they would have been much more clear about it. They just needed everyone to calm down.

I'm a bit hazy on what all this is buying us. My own employer is cutting, not replacing employees who leave, and seemingly battening down the hatches in anticipation of a downturn. Where's all that growth and investment? Even the equity markets are unimpressed with this BS.

A subtle caveat in Barr's statements in his written testimony that he wants to let Mueller finish and be transparent about findings is "where judgments are to be made by me." Under Barr's view of executive power, Trump could direct the AG to substitute his own legal judgments.

A key change.   White folks without college degrees:

The increase in disapproval for the President comes primarily among whites without college degrees, 45% of whom approve and 47% disapprove, marking the first time his approval rating with this group has been underwater in CNN polling since February 2018. In December, his approval rating with whites who have not received a four-year degree stood at 54%, with 39% disapproving. Among whites who do hold college degrees, Trump's ratings are largely unchanged in the last month and remain sharply negative -- 64% disapprove and 32% approve.

Yeah. No problem at all setting up a server to avoid FOIA and general transparency. Totally overblown that 30,000 emails were then intentionally wiped from said server. All the important emails were recorded on the other end, because there was no way any emails went elsewhere.

Both things are troubling. One's obviously far more grave if true. We don't want our elected officials to be beholden to foreign governments. But we also can't have our public officials conducting all their business off the books. Seems possible to hold both ideas in mind at once

It's not just Gabbard. Candidates like Beto are also treated differently than candidates perceived to be orthodox. Plus he has the Bernie Bros distorting his positions too. I thought 2 years of Trump would lead folks to give a little in the coalition-building process. It's scary

There's a lot more people in this country against Trump than for Trump. But the Trumpkins are all on the same page. If everyone outside of a narrow selection of policy preferences is treated as a second class candidate, the way politics work is that will absolutely lower turnout

I really think you're underestimating her conservative, not liberal, views. She attacked Obama from the right, as she did Hirono. Her support from Duke and Spencer gives liberals pause. But again, I definitely believe in a big boisterous primary.

...I will say, I think when folks see some candidates treated a lot more viciously than others, particularly when they have views, like non-interventionism, that are often sidelined in coalition-building, that turns them off to the process, suppresses turnout and benefits Trump

Perhaps what you see as dismissal is just disagreement with your assumptions. I don’t see Gabbard as anti-war, since she’s pro Russian bombing in Syria. Indeed she calls herself a hawk in some arenas. Anyway, I just hope you keep an open mind to other Dems.

I'm sure Tulsi can handle it; she served three tours in war zones, unlike Neera, who gets paid in the hundreds of thousands to cover for CAP's secret corporate donors, including war and healthcare profiteers. Want to see the list that's been leaked?

Noah, YOU may consider a 70 percent top marginal rate to be centrist, but you're already so far to the left that you may have lost perspective on what centrist is.

Centrism in 2019 is, we need to cut social security to reduce the deficit. That's the center.

Neera Tanden
@neeratanden

Replying to @SnoozeButtonBen @Noahpinion

If the center is an opinion 15% of the country believes in at this point, I think that term center has its lost meaning.

Libs aren't taking my advice but the "pressure McConnell" strategy on the shutdown is hilarious to me. Perhaps there is a politician who gives fewer fs about pressure press coverage, but in 20 years I haven't met him/her yet.

I know we have two years of evidence that people who work in the White House are idiots. But this makes them the dumbest people on earth. Pelosi has a spine of steel.

few weeks ago. They thought Pelosi would be ready to deal, and could deliver Trump his wall once she got past her leadership election. It was a serious misjudgment by an administration that frequently misreads the Hill -- and is having a tough time reading Pelosi.

THEY THOUGHT she would cave on the wall, and she isn't.

WHAT TO UNDERSTAND ABOUT PELOSI ... She's a slow-burn type leader -- not unlike SENATE MAJORITY LEADER MITCH

I'm so weary of privileged folks demanding young sexy Dems in order to support the party

Especially when Dems like Pelosi & Schumer are trying to reopen the government to benefit hundreds of thousands of Americans, stop a racist wall being built & - no kidding - save democracy!

Good plan. The government reopening should be the only thing on the agenda. Period.

Senator Ben Cardin @SenatorCardin
Agreed. This isn't business as usual. This is a crisis, a fundamental failure to govern, and Americans are suffering for it.

The Senate should not take up any bills unrelated to reopening the government until

Just like attacks from the left after the primary against Hillary helped Trump win. You and I may not agree on everything, but I agree that politics hasn't done enough for people hurting and must do more. And if you support Bernie, great. Just don't attack the party to do so.

Do you know what "arm twisting" and "forced capitulation" mean? Even you can't deny that it's a whole other world up there and it's all about deals and winning favor. Personally, I think we should change the system. It's obvious why you won't agree.

No one cares about any candidate pledging their support to another. We vote policies/platforms, not parties. And certainly not because our preferred tells us to. Not sure when or if you Democrats will ever understand that, so far it appears to be out of your comprehension zone.

The piece includes a lot of quotes and nuance pushing back. What it doesn't do is include quotes or specific sourcing for the framework it starts with other than "Washington [DC] Democrats have complained privately" and "the rap on her."

> Nick Confessore @nickconfessore

> FWIW, it also seems to me that @natashakorecki's piece does a good job of "problematizing" the "likeability" issue in all its complexities, including how it is a gendered stereotype, and why it is a political obstacle—which it is. politico.com/story/2018/12/…

This is as absurd as lecturing people who voted 3rd party they were 'voting for Hillary.'

Just let people decide on their own who to support. We don't need another 'YOU ARE PERSONALLY RESPONSIBLE FOR THE DESTRUCTION OF MANKIND IF YOU DON'T VOTE FOR ME' election season.

I don't care about Trump one way or another. Our presidential terms are 4 years. A lot can be done, but it can be challenged by the next candidate and so on.

I see no purpose in trying to shame people into voting.

No person is requiring people to fall into two camps. The constitutional system does that. If we had a parliamentary system, have at voting for any party. We do not. If you wanted to stop Trump the way to do that was to vote for his closest opponent.

Unlike folks who merely complain I ran for office in great part to not seeing proficiency in the checks on power.

Many have no desire to be a Democrat. It's probably more productive to your goals to collaborate with folks rather than assert they are (inaccurately) the problem.

I think it's incredibly emotionally shallow to require people to fall into one of two political camps, and not a mutually exclusive value with fighting for vulnerable populations - which I do frequently as a part of my professional life. I most certainly did not vote for Trump.

Welcome to the minority Mark Meadows. Your extortion has come to an end. New sheriff in town. Happy new year!

Mark Meadows @RepMarkMeadows

Nancy Pelosi's newest funding proposal doesn't represent any serious attempt to secure our border or find a compromise. A $1.3 billion Democrat wish list that includes zero money for a border barrier is a non-starter and will not be a legitimate answer to this impasse.

The market is deciding. Censorship is done by the state.

David Axelrod @davidaxelrod

Louis C.K. "joke" about heroic Parkland kids was as tasteless as could be but not a huge surprise. He's made a career of that.
But shouldn't audiences decide to show up or not?
De facto censorship isn't the answer.

Yes, I completely get the humor! Your expression in the photo says it all. I just think seeing his face reminds me how much harm people like him do to others who are not able to advocate for themselves. Why not use Trump's pic? I still love your work!

I'm open to Harris. She's a fighter, female, and can probably carry her home State. She didn't lose. But worried she may not have the fundraising network. Although rise in small dollar donors during mid-terms on Dem side was encouraging. Top to mid-tier for me.

And who is doing the latter, Neera? Unless it's someone with an "R" behind their name I'm fairly confident none of the liberal critiques are intended to destroy the party. They might indicate some failures the party has been responsible for though! Food for thought....

Blue New World @BlueNewWorld · 28 Dec 2018
Could be wrong but think Neera is referring to liberals in the Green Party (and 'DemExiters') who are for crippling the Democratic Party.

Criticisms within the party are normal and healthy, as long as they have basis in truth and do not outright demonize good people.

You're correct that there are numbers on this and it's not surprising that people might be inclined to say that a candidate who ran in the last election shouldn't run again. But my point is that polls also show few Democrats actually dislike Bernie Sanders.

There was a poll out yesterday on the topic. It had numbers out on Dems and Dem leaners excited by a run by a candidate versus not wanting him or her to run. So there's data out there on these points. Not just one's feelings.

The exchange is below. Neera complained to his bosses and he was summarily fired my mother because she wanted to be in Democratic politics," and advanced the position that Tanden supported welfare reform in the 1990s, when Bill Clinton was president. Bruenig has been critical of Clinton in his writings, calling her "an enemy of the poor" and "a garbage rich person."

Tanden tweeted at Bruenig that "having been on welfare myself, don't need lectures on this topic from you."

Bernie supporters don't take marching orders either, as you know. But you could at least hold Neera accountable for her own words, since you want to hold Bernie accountable for a loosely organized network of supporters.

Only your own words. Never Neera-world or Neera-ite. I agree with Josh that you don't give marching orders. You both seem to project a lot of power onto Bernie to control the actions of his supporters.

Could you please point to some actual evidence of that? I literally have only tweeted about his supporters and their attacks on other candidates. Not him.

I really don't understand the point of these weird feints. Of course Sirota is pulling for Bernie. So is Ryan and the entire Greenwaldian orbit. They aren't shy about their support for him. Is the argument that it's rude to speak the obvious?

It would be like pretending Fox News is neutral. Why would any normal person do that?

To be clear, @NateSilver538 has the actual facts and it was 95% approval when he left.

Neera Tanden @neeratanden
What is Obama's approval in the Democratic Party? 90%? 95%? His approval is in the 60s in the whole country. People who think that being like Obama is an attack line in the Democratic party need to get out more.

It's such a bizarre tactic to attack Barack Obama in an attempt to win Democratic voters. And they wonder why they lost by 4 MILLION votes and didn't win the nomination.

This...is not reality - but if you view the ACA as a disappointment that Obama easily could've done better (which is delusional) rather than the most significant piece of progressive legislation since the 60s (which Dems had tried and failed for a century to pass), than sure.

I am the chair for all candidates. Ask candidates in NE--or ask Heath Mello who stood with him as he was dragged into a ridiculous national conversation essentially saying he did not belong in the party. Tired of pundits and keyboard activists. Spend more time in sale barns.

Her point, Jane, is that ppl are tired of the Bernie camp gratuitously attacking Dems (like you are doing by randomly posting this article taunting a privacy invasion). Weird that as a state party chair instead of standing up against attacks on Dems, you do this kind of attack

@neeratanden

It's odd her first instinct isn't to defend a Dem from attack. You're the Democratic party's state party chair; not the party chair for any candidate. But glad you allowed a primary in your state.

anti every potential Dem candidate except Bernie journalists and activists say they're just "vetting." I took 10 minutes this morning and demonstrated that Bernie has a bunch of problematic positions, both currently and in his past. They're not vetting, they're attacking

People who have never gone without insurance because of their personal wealth attacking the ACA, that has provided health care to millions of previously uninsured people, is disgusting, whether done by the wealthy left or the wealthy right.

Matt Stoller @matthewstoller
Nearly all stock is held by the wealthy and its value reflects the capitalization of monopoly profits. If you want to know why Obamacare was so badly done, just realize that this private equity executive was an important policymaker in the Obama admin. twitter.com/ASlavitt/statu…

@neeratanden When you quipped on MSNBC, "We're all like, he's Colonel Mustard in the library..."

According to @donnabrazile the centrist Democrats controlled the primary process on behalf of one who snatched the nomination after losing her previous attempt. The purpose of the Democrat Party elite is to intercept and neutralize demands for change from below and to the left.

I ask Dems all the time about the legislative filibuster, and with some exceptions, like Merkley, they can't dream of killing it.

Doing so for a $5 billion wall fund would get the GOP little while enabling enormous policy change by a future D POTUS.

Fine, but then they bear the consequences. When Dems take over, we can enact progressive policies. The filibuster is anti-democratic and just a tool to obstruct progress (without having to take ownership for the obstruction).

Trump is destroying our alliances and tanking the stock market. His presidency has been great for Putin. They made the investment of a lifetime in him.

The other astute political calculation that was ingenious was predicting our reaction. We react to his actual destructive actions with inconsequential outrage rather than proactive measures to stop what is so clearly a coup on our democracy. Hopefully that changes on Jan. 3.

Reminder: the wall is unpopular

> Donald J. Trump @realDonaldTrump
> The Democrats, whose votes we need in the Senate, will probably vote against Border Security and the Wall even though they know it is DESPERATELY NEEDED. If the Dems vote no, there will be a shutdown that will last for a very long time. People don't want Open Borders and Crime!

Sure but even granting yr scenario, we win at most three congressional seats at the cost of a political framing that rehabilitates people like George W Bush and David Frum. Is that actually worthwhile? Does that build the sort of mvmt we need?

magisterial reformation stan @benjamindcrosby · 19 Dec 2018

Like, the world with the "responsible, sane" ones in charge invaded Iraq. I want the Democrats to stand for something at least a little bit more than that. But perhaps that's asking too much.

The idea that the DNC rigged the primary did not start with the Russians. What the Russians do is take existing fissures and dissatisfactions and exploit them. Saying that dissatisfaction with the DNC is a Russian operation a) isn't true, and b) sweeps the problems under the rug.

Actually, she damaged herself with me (white, non-college educated woman). Every time I gave her a chance, in my mind, to redeem herself, she did the wrong thing. And I gave her plenty of chances. #StandingRock #VPChoice, etc.

No she did that through her owm low favorability ratings. She decided to ignore these demographics during the campaign. Obama was attacked by Hillary for Jeremiah Wright and he got past it.

yeah it's not like we should expect our candidates to be honest & tell us about their speeches

Clarus the Dogcow @The_Dogcow · 18 Dec 2018
The only reason we know about the speeches is because Hillary released her tax returns, which Bernie refused to do. Had she been as opaque about her finances as Sanders, the speeches would have remained secret. Shouldn't we expect transparency from Sanders?

This.

Kamala Harris went into law enforcement to fix a system that is as broken and racist as it is because it is dominated by a white patriarchy. She won some reform fights, lost some, then went to Congress with ideas to enact fixes at the federal level.

All of this is good.

Short answer: Every legal attack on ACA has been focused on the market-based aspects. Mandate, subsidies. No court has suggested that expanding existing government programs would violate the Constitution. twitter.com/freedlander/st…

People are going to stay awake tonight panicked they are going to lose the care that keeps them alive. Because of your lawsuit. What a disgrace.

The essential point here appears to be: GOP & Trump told bare-faced lies about their policy aims while many, (but not all), journalists lapped it up and asked for more. Now people are acting surprised.

What's wild about this is Trump traveled with Republicans all over the country in the 2018 election vowing to protect preexisting conditions while his administration — and several of those candidates — were supporting this lawsuit in court.

The individual mandate was essentially eliminated by the tax bill. So this is striking down the whole law for a provision that no longer has an impact. Seriously crackpot decision.

Nicholas Bagley @nicholas_bagley
The Texas decision on the Affordable Care Act is out. The individual mandate is unconstitutional, the court rules, and the mandate can't be severed from the rest of the Act.

But the media only played a fraction of Hillary's comment about coal miners and you know it. She clearly had plans to help them thrive when coal was supplanted by clean technologies, but that isn't as click-bait-y. Shame on the media.

I often stated, "One way or the other, Mexico is going to pay for the Wall." This has never changed. Our new deal with Mexico (and Canada), the USMCA, is so much better than the old, very costly & anti-USA NAFTA deal, that just by the money we save, MEXICO IS PAYING FOR THE WALL!

I love ideas like massive public investment in renewables. We've supported that. No one knows how to meet Paris targets that way. We propose a carbon tax that has massive rebates for lower income.That's better option. But pullback of carbon tax of any kind in France seems a worry

That's a neat trick: quote a disreputable source as if it was fact to distract from your own previously ignorant statement. Here's truth: Macron is a Rothschild banker who taxed the poor and let the 1% off the hook. That's neoliberalism in a nutshell. That's what causes unrest.

Macron's policies to cut taxes on the rich or weaken labor are wrong. I've said many a time his economic policies are to the right of me. Fair to attack those policies. But I worry about progressive attacks on a carbon tax because decarbonizing the economy takes action like that

Who cares how you "grew up". Your positions now are what we are talking about. The Paris riots are about economic inequality. Clinton/Obama lost because of economic inequality. You can't enforce a carbon tax with the same inequality of the rest of the neoliberal system.

If your family didn't have a permanent vacation home when you were a kid, Josh def has you beat in the privilege department. Not to mention he lied about it

In the opening to Gasland, Fox refers to 19.5 acres in Milanville, Pennsylvania as "my land". Supporters of fracking in the area of Pennsylvania where Fox lived questioned whether he was really a local. They claimed that he and his family were New Yorkers and used the Pennsylvania property as a weekend retreat. The Wayne County Bureau of Elections stated that Fox had registered to vote in Milanville in December 2002. In discussions and e-mail conversations, Fox claimed that he grew up in both areas. He stated that "Milanville is the only consistent home I've had my whole life", and he called the property "the centering point of my life." He does not feel he tried to hide his New York roots, because during most of the filming of Gasland he wore his New York Yankees cap.[15]

Sure, but look at the specific French context rather than talking generally about climate change. Macron is introducing a regressive gas tax at the same time he is cutting taxes on the wealthy. He could instead introduce a carbon tax & offset it by lowering other regressive taxes

This is fair. But the fact that the yellow vests have a list of demands that include dropping all taxes 50% and not in a progressive way should make you concerned as well.

Honestly I haven't seen this particular demand in what I've read of the protests. Regardless, I think the protesters are making some demands I sympathize with, and others I don't, so the challenge for the French left is channelling that energy in a positive progressive direction.

I drive ■ #ChevyVolt, because I had the luxury to pay $40,000 for a hybrid after I graduated from law school. In WA state, our myopic government has made car tabs so expensive that I know construction workers who had to stop driving their cars, and take buses w/30+ lbs of tools.

The theory of a carbon tax is the Chevy volt becomes a lot cheaper relative to other cars.

Because #Macron cut taxes for the wealthy and now he's trying to force more austerity on workers? Carbon taxes passed onto consumers are a poor way to pursue environmental policy. Go after the super rich oil producers, who are sitting on billions in oil wealth already. Be fair.

If you're willing to help Trump get re-elected you're not hurting me, you're hurting the undocumented immigrants he rounds up. That's not progressive. That's sanctioning evil. Don't lecture us on your virtue.

Democratic presidents never deported? Never bombed for imperial gain? Trump isn't some anomaly in the system.

Voting "lesser evil" is still sanctioning evil.

But, as you said, it doesn't hurt you, so who cares as long as its the Blue side that wins.

Seriously @jjz1600, you know Beto took no corp pac money. In fact he took no pac money of any kind. These are small dollar donations from employees. So if this is an ok criticism it'd be fair to attack Sanders for hypocrisy for the money he took from Wall Street employees.

The problem here is, IT'S ILLEGAL IN NC. It's also illegal to tale ballots not completed, signed or in the sealed envelope. They have ALL KNOWINGLY, INTENTIONALLY BROKEN ELECTION LAWS. They deserve jail time and some type of restitution for the cost of another election.

In most cases, no new election is required when a candidate breaks election law. That candidate is simply disqualified, and the results reported after dismissing all votes for them.
There's considerable precedent for this type of ruling.

Right now I'm a "maybe" on Beto. The only way I get to a "yes" is precisely from asking these sorts of tough questions and finding out what his answers would be. Is this not the purpose of a primary/nomination process, critiquing/testing/vetting

It's so weird how you all move the goal post like this. This is what I'm taking about. Both of us need each other to win in 2020. Somehow for the sake of existential truth we must learn to speak and not do this. We were taking about 2016 and you moved the conversation to 2018.

I mean....,wow.

Even as Democrats won back the House of Representatives last month, some high-profile left-wing candidates fell short. a dynamic Sanders struggled with; he opened the weekend conference by saying the party could have done better. For the senator and his supporters, it was clear that Democrats had squandered power when they last held it, leading to a surge of right-wing nationalism. To avoid a repeat, the left needed to organize — preferably, many here believe, with Sanders in the White House.

Real question here @hughhewitt. Have you chastised Tom Cotton for blocking a nominee, not out of a policy difference, but Just To Hurt Obama, until the woman died? Seems worthy of a tweet.

Hugh Hewitt @hughhewitt
The nominees @JeffFlake was indifferent/cruel towards had majority support, would have been confirmed. That's on him. His vanity led to their injury. Their isn't any way to explain/defend it. He owns it. I hope others treat his children with kindness, not Flake-inspired cruelty. twitter.com/hughhewitt/sta...

Our vote counting process in CA is pretty open and transparent. There's a process to sign in and watch the ballot count, and I have done so in O.C. and LA.

There's an orientation, they explain how everything works; it's very educational.

Neera, the goal of Russian fascism is to taint everyone and everything as being somehow tied to Russia. They want to stoke McCarthyism to create chaos.

Russia doesn't control about controlling the US, they just want to create a new Eurasian empire.

There is real stuff going on with Russia, but if you don't understand how the creation of hysteria is one of their goals, you're operating at a very beginner's level.

Caucuses distort democracy. There is no legit reason to choose a caucus over a primary. And a state party that chooses a caucus because its chair is aligned with a particular candidate is deeply problematic. People should not stand for this.

What ■ your point? That Nebraska is awful? That our candidates were? That I am? All the above? We elected 73% of 850 Dems who ran in our state. We are damn proud. Your shade @neeratanden means zero to us who live and work in "red" states.

You know the answer to that question. It is 0 on the congressional side.

You also know that Nebraska is a very red state. I would hope so, anyway.

Maybe read some of her other tweets—so when I saw her celebrating the 40 Dems the point is some of those are progressive and some moderate and some like Bernie and some don't. Some like Clinton or other leaders and some don't. So celebrate them all...but that's not what she does.

By Neera Tanden

The wide range of political convictions on display this primary season –from leaders like Danny O'Connor in Ohio's 12th congressional district, Conor Lamb in Pennsylvania and Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez in New York – isn't, as some commentators have suggested, a weakness of the Democratic Party. Rather, it is a clear signal of the party's strength. It is a sign that the party is dynamic and responsive thriving democracy, and a thriving Democratic Party.

And, in the era of Trump, Democratic primary voters in reliably blue districts are indeed voting for candidates further on the left. But in many swing districts, they're also backing candidates – and especially women candidates – who can best attract crossover support during their general elections. This week, for instance, Gretchen Whitmer became the Democratic nominee for the next Governor of Michigan, while Haley Stevens in Michigan and Sharice Davids in Kansas now have outstanding chances of winning their

2)Did they make it clear these demands applied to both a Dem & Rep Speaker?

Unless there's proof that 1) and 2) happened, this looks like a BS double standard being applied to Dem leadership.

I'd say it was a combination of factors, which had varying roles depending on the district and candidate. Someone like Ocasio-Cortez wouldn't have won in #MI08, and someone like Elissa Slotkin might not have won in the Bronx. And that's fine because, y'know, they both won.

My point isn't just about /losing. That is a zero/sum game and not about governing itself.

It's about standing for the right things as a party first. Getting rid of all neolib losing policies/people and not governing from a self-centered power-base controlled from the top.

Sure, but that is not the whole picture either. Not by a long shot. So someone wins in some district - they get in and then what? They don't have equal power - we both know the real game. My point again the 'game' is not set up for us, the people. And neither is either party.

We cannot let our guard down about what may emerge from legislation at state level that are further attempts to disenfranchise voters like happened in ND. Election observers are key as happened in ND, Republican election clerks are willing to go to such ends to obfuscate.

Big fan of LBJ here, but let's not leave out the fact those accomplishments blew up the Democratic Party to smithereens for at least a generation. So "Establishment" is a notional term in that sense.

Martha Coakley bears exponentially more responsibility for losing the public option than @NancyPelosi. Coakley somehow lost Teddy Kennedy's seat (necessary to prevent a GOP filibuster) to a Cosmo centerfold model. Pelosi miraculously snatched victory from the jaws of defeat.

I went back and reviewed the history of the public option (and I was a PO activist then). I stand by my point. The original House Bill passed with PO. But rejected by Sen. Then when House progs went to re-introduce, Pelosi scuttled, claiming not enough votes, and gave up.

Lord. He spent a gazillion of his own dollars on this race. Anyone think he would have even come close if he didn't massively outspend Nelson? Nope.

Marc Caputo @MarcACaputo
Rick Scott wins ugly.

But he wins.

Democrats have a Florida problem. We better figure it out before 2020.

I wish I could tweet this a million times.

Nate Silver @NateSilver538
About 60 million people turned out to vote for Democrats for the House this year. That is a crazy number. (Republicans got 45m votes in the 2010 wave.)

And this was sort of missed. Why so many stories about Trump voters in truck stops

Iowa shouldn't be critical in the Dem nomination contest is my point.

Dan @DaytimeDan

Replying to @ArmandoNDK @armandodkos

For sure. But in 2020 IA is going to be critical. If you're a top-tier non-midwest candidate, a lot of attention will be paid to how well you can perform there, mostly because it'll serve as a proxy (rightly or wrongly) for how you'd do in WI/MI/PA

I think this is really important. Given Dems hope of expansion in the Southwest, Iowa and NH really shouldn't determine the presidential.

I've always thought we should rotate "first in the nation" voting. And don't get me started on how totally undemocratic caucuses are!

Both states are very very white. It gives primacy if white voter wishes over everyone else for a party whose base is anything but...

People who think that Dems can't do much better in a presidential year like 2020 - in states they didn't win this year - are not thinking about politics right. 2018 was the beginning of the power of the Resistance. Not the end.

Nate Silver @NateSilver538
There's not any precedent for an opposition party coming this close to matching the president's vote total from 2 years earlier. The closest to an exception was when Democratic House candidates in 1970 got 92% of Nixon's vote total from 1968.

That's not a reasonable view. Failing to win statewide in Iowa and Ohio in this year is the proof in the pudding. Trump's racism has its hold on them. Reality. Michigan, Wisconsin governors flipped. Ohio GOP won by 4. Iowa GOP won. It's not the same

You are not giving enough attention to the salience of economic issues and candidates. Thinking Ohio is gone when Sherrod won is silly. So is thinking Iowa is gone when Dems did so well there at Congressional level. Gov isn't everything

Well what I think doesn't matter - Iowa will go first and we'll try and compete on Ohio and Iowa. As they say, good luck.

Brown is a special case. Look at how Cordray performed - it wasn't "just Hillary." I think Iowa more likely to flip back in 2020 than Ohio - they are getting hammered by tariffs and we almost flipped all 4 House seats.

I'm less sure than Armando on Ohio, although it's one cycle away from being true. Iowa is gone and should be treated as such.

Before 2018 the Congressional delegation was 1/4 Dem. Now it's 3/4 Dem. That's far more change to the Dems in Iowa than Ohio.

Economic damage from pork and soybean tariffs will also influence Iowa voters.
